12          servational methods that provide reliable
13          and generalizable findings;

14          “(iv) strong claims of causal relation-
15          ships, only with research designs that 16          eliminate plausible competing explanations
17          for observed results, such as, but not lim-
18          ited to, random assignment experiments;

19          “(v) presentation of studies and meth-
20          ods in sufficient detail and clarity to allow 21          for replication or, at a minimum, to offer
22          the opportunity to build systematically on 23          the findings of the research;

24          “(vi) acceptance by a peer-reviewed
25          journal or critique by a panel of inde-

1           pendent experts through a comparably rig-
2           orous, objective, and scientific review; and 3           “(vii) consistency of findings across
